Special Report 72

April, 1983

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS

Only 22% of the eligible voters appeared at the polls in the June 1982 primary election to cast their ballots. Counties with the larger cities tended to have lower turnout, with Stutsman, Stark, Ward, Grand Forks, Morton, Burleigh, Williams and Cass all among the 12 counties below the state turnout figure. The highest turnout counties tended to be in the south central portion of the state.

* * *

In the primary election, an average of 80% of the voters who showed up at the polls bothered to vote on the four ballot measures. Voters in the western counties were more likely to vote on measures while voters in counties with larger cities tended to neglect the issues. The vote on measures was much stronger in the general election with 86% of the voters casting ballots on the measures. (Compare maps on Pages 8 and 32)

* * *

Do voters in some counties have a more negative attitude toward measures than voters in other counties? "No" vote statistics were compiled for the four measures in the 1982 primary and the five non-controversial measures in the 1982 general to find an answer to this question - but no real answer was found. (See Pages 9 and 25) The range was somewhat broader in the primary (35% to 63%) than in the general (39% to 55%) - whatever that means.

* * *

Voter turnout in the general election (Pages 11-12) bounded up to 59% - almost triple that of the primary. Cass showed the biggest increase from primary to general - 433%. Again, counties with larger cities tended to have low turnout - Grand Forks being at the bottom with 42% as compared to Golden Valley at the top with an astounding 91%.

* * *

In the general election, the office of U.S. Senator attracted the votes of most of those who came to the polls - 96%. But 96% of those who came to the polls also voted on Measure No. 6 to limit gambling, suggesting that the higher general election turnout could be attributed to the gambling issue. Other measures on the ballot attracted much less voter interest - some as much as 15% less than the vote on Measure No. 6.

* * *

While only 80% of the voters who came to the polls in the primary bothered to vote on the measures, this increased to an average of 86% for all fall measures - primarily because of the heavy vote on the gambling measure.
